1) Once upon a time there was a miller whose only inheritance to his three sons was his mill, his donkey, and his cat. The division was soon made. They hired neither a clerk nor an attorney, for they would have eaten up all the poor patrimony. The eldest took the mill, the second the donkey, and the youngest nothing but a cat.

2) He glanced at the cat and scratched his head:
 1) I know you're a good cat and I love you. But if you are truly smart, cut your losses and leave me alone with my misery. With my job and what I can earn from it, I can only guarantee three things: cold in winter, hot in summer and hunger throughout the year.

3) The cat, who heard all this, but pretended otherwise, said to him with a grave and serious air: - Do not be so concerned, my good master, if you will but give me a bag, and have a pair of boots made for me, that I may scamper through the dirt and the brambles, then you shall see that you are not so poorly off with me as you imagine. After receiving what he had asked for, the cat gallantly pulled on the boots and slung the bag about his neck. Holding its drawstrings in his forepaws, he went to a place where there was a great abundance of rabbits. The cat set to work immediately and within an hour, he came back with a nice rabbit.

5) He was shown upstairs into the king's apartment, and, making a low bow, said to him, "Your majesty, I have brought you a rabbit from my noble lord, the Marquis of Carabas (for that was the title which the cat was pleased to give his master). Tell your master, said the king, that I thank him, and that I am very pleased with his gift."

6) Another time, he went and hid himself in a grain field. He again held his bag open, and when a brace of partridges ran into it, he drew the strings, and caught them both. He presented these to the king, as he had done before with the rabbit. The king, in like manner, received the partridges with great pleasure, and gave him a tip. The cat continued, from time to time for two or three months, to take game to his majesty from his master.

8) The Marquis of Carabas did what the cat advised him to, without knowing why. While he was bathing the King passed by, and the cat began to cry out. - Help! Help! My Lord Marquis of Carabas is going to be drowned. At this noise the king put his head out of the coach window, and, finding it was the cat who had so often brought him such good game, he commanded his guards to run immediately to the assistance of his lordship the Marquis of Carabas.

[10] The king received him very courteously. And, because the king's fine clothes gave him a striking appearance (for he was very handsome), the king's daughter took a secret inclination to him. The Marquis of Carabas cast two or three respectful and somewhat tender glances at her and she fell head over heels in love with him. The king asked him to enter the coach and join them on their drive.

13) The king did indeed ask the mowers whose meadow it was that they were mowing.
- It belongs to my Lord Marquis of Carabas, they answered altogether, for the cat's threats had frightened them.
- You see, sire, said the Marquis, this is a meadow which never fails to yield a plentiful harvest.
The master's cat, still running on ahead, met with some reapers, and said to them.
- My good fellows, if you do not tell the king that all this grain belongs to the Marquis of Carabas, you shall be chopped up like minced meat.

199 - I have heard, said the cat, that you are able to change yourself into any kind of creature that you have a mind to. You can, for example, transform yourself into a lion, an elephant, or the like. That is true, answered the ape very briskly, and to convince you, I shall now become a lion. The cat was so terrified at the sight of a lion so near him that he leaped onto the roof, which put him even greater danger, as his boots were of no help at all to him in walking on the tiles.

20) However, the ogre resumed his natural form, and the cat came down, saying that he had been very frightened indeed.
 I have further been told, said the cat, that you can also transform yourself into the smallest of animals, for example, a rat or a mouse. But I can scarcely believe that. I confess I think that would be quite impossible.
 Impossible! cried the ogre. You shall see!
 He immediately changed himself into a mouse and began to run about the floor. As soon as the cat saw this, he fell upon him and gobbled him up.

21) Meanwhile the king, who saw this fine castle of the regre's as he passed, decided to go inside. The cat, who heard the noise of his majesty's coach running over the drawbridge, ran out and said to the king,
 Your majesty is welcome to this castle of my Lord
 Marquis of Carabas.
 What! my Lord Marquis, cried the king, and does this castle also belong to you? There can be nothing finer than this court and all the stately buildings which surround it. Let us go inside, if you don't mind.
